Environmental Graphics / Embellishing your everyday surroundings

--- What design discipline combines aspects of architecture, urban planning, landscaping, interior decoration, scenography, lighting, historical preservation, industrial design, way-finding, information graphics and graffiti? Answer: environmental design.

--- Sharing the street artist's desire to "re-claim" public spaces for the people that inhabit them, environmental designers – whose work is usually commissioned rather than self-initiated – place a lot of importance on the character and traditional nature of these spaces, and trying to achieve harmony with them, rather than simply expressing themselves.

--- We have brought together 10 leading exponents of this fascinating design departure to tell you how they go about it – and show off some of their most successful achievements.

Hungary / Designers playing catch-up – "hungary" for success

--- A landlocked country, Hungary has also been locked into a series of inhibiting circumstances – from wars to communist dictatorship – for most of the 20th century that have conspired to hold back the natural artistic talent of its people. But despite suffering the spin-off from Europe's economic woes, the creative scene there – inspired by the internationalism of unfettered Internet access – is striving hard to make up for lost time.
